Cherry dedicates his novel "to Richard Wright, Chester B. Himes and John A. Williams whose literary harvests continue to reap."

DeCoste, Damon Marcel. "To Blot It All Out: The Politics of Realism in Richard Wright's Native Son." Style 32.1 (Spring 1998): 127-147. Rpt. in Twentieth-Century Literary Criticism. Ed. Thomas J. Schoenberg and Lawrence J. Trudeau. Vol. 180. Detroit: Gale, 2007. Literature Resource Center. Web. 28 Mar. 2011.

DeCoste questions the common reading of Native Son as a realistic text and, as such, a work that is socially and politically conservative, contending instead that it is "a novel about realism."

Gibson, Donald B. "Wright's Invisible Native Son." American Quarterly 21.4 (Winter 1969): 728-738. Rpt. in Twentieth-Century Literary Criticism. Ed. Thomas J. Schoenberg and Lawrence J. Trudeau. Vol. 180. Detroit: Gale, 2007. Literature Resource Center. Web. 28 Mar. 2011.

Gibson maintains that the "final meaning" of Native Son depends on a recognition by the reader of Bigger's individuality, as opposed to his role as a symbolic social figure.

Joyce, Joyce Ann. "Characterization and Point of View: The Tragic Hero." Richard Wright's Art of Tragedy. Iowa City: University of Iowa Press, 1986. 52-74. Rpt. in Twentieth-Century Literary Criticism. Ed. Thomas J. Schoenberg and Lawrence J. Trudeau. Vol. 180. Detroit: Gale, 2007. Literature Resource Center. Web. 28 Mar. 2011.

Joyce interprets Native Son as a work of tragedy and Bigger as a "tragic hero." She examines those aspects of Bigger's characterization--especially his hubris--that ensure his fate and contribute to his ultimate destruction.

Kearns, Edward. "The 'Fate' Section of Native Son." Contemporary Literature 12.2 (Spring 1971): 146-155. Rpt. in Twentieth-Century Literary Criticism. Ed. Thomas J. Schoenberg and Lawrence J. Trudeau. Vol. 180. Detroit: Gale, 2007. Literature Resource Center. Web. 28 Mar. 2011.

Kearns disputes assertions that Book III of Native Son is overly abstract, ideological, and, thus, aesthetically unrelated to Bigger's narrative in Books I and II; instead, he posits that the "process of abstraction" in the "Fate" section is essential to Bigger's achievement of self-awareness at the end of the novel.

"Native Son." Twentieth-Century Literary Criticism. Ed. Thomas J. Schoenberg and Lawrence J. Trudeau. Vol. 180. Detroit: Gale, 2007. Literature Resource Center. Web. 28 Mar. 2011.

Ramadanovic argues that Native Son is a tragedy in the classical sense of the term, demonstrating the central role of fate in Wright's novel and the manner in which Bigger rises to the level of a tragic protagonist.

Rampersad, Arnold. Ralph Ellison: A Biography. New York: Alfred A Knopf, 2007.

Provides insights regarding Wright's friendship and correspondence with and influences on Ellison

Redden, Dorothy S. "Richard Wright and Native Son: Not Guilty." Black American Literature Forum 10.4 (Winter 1976): 111-116. Rpt. in Twentieth-Century Literary Criticism. Ed. Thomas J. Schoenberg and Lawrence J. Trudeau. Vol. 180. Detroit: Gale, 2007. Literature Resource Center. Web. 28 Mar. 2011.

In the following essay, Redden counters three prevailing assumptions about Wright's Native Son: one, that "vengefulness" on the part of the author is a key element of the text; two, that Book III is strictly didactic and a platform for Wright's Communist beliefs; and three, that the book "allocates blame to and threatens punishment of white society."

The article discusses the queer perspective that connects the characters in Richard Wright's and Frantz Fanon's novels. Tuhkanen contends that Wright's references to queerness and straightness in his books are not coincidences, and suggests that the etymologically queer and straight words are strategies for understanding postcolonial situations in Native Son and "Bright and Morning Star." Wright's fictional characters are examined against Fanon's theory of de-colonization in "Algeria Unveiled."

Elder discusses one of the most stunning aspects of Frederick Douglass's narrative of his experiences as a slave, his keen insight into the psychology of both the slave and the slave owner. Douglass vividly represents the diabolical psychological manipulation of the slaves by the white masters, but he also shows the figures in his work to be psychologically damaged by the unnatural and unholy master/slave relationship. Richard Wright's representation of Jim Crow-era Chicago in Native Son depicts a society in logical progression from Douglass's slave era.
